It's midsummer, which means you're probably breaking a sweat just to check your mail. You know what would be great? Autumn. Autumn cliffs. Until we learn to speed up time or control the weather, this autumn home screen will have to be done. This home screen is designed for Themer, although parts can also be built with Widget and Media Utilities. To get this look in Themer, download the .zip file from the original link below, and then follow these steps: Move .zip to sdcard0 zgt; MyColorScreen zgt; themer zgt; export zgt; zip (your original location can vary.) Open Themer and browse the themes. As part of the Category, select Export. Choose Autumn grey.zip You have an awesome, tweaked-in-oblivion home or lock screen yourself that you would like to share? Post it in the comments below, or on your own Kinja blog with a home screen showcase tag (no quotes). Be sure to include a description of how you did this so we can show it as the next featured home screen. Instead of being afraid of wrinkles and hormonal changes, women are increasingly adopting them, equipping themselves with the latest research, technology, products and expert advice to help their bodies age to age And the same thing seems to be happening for the hair. A recent YouGov poll saw more than 60% of women agree that they were either ambivalent towards or not concerned about grey, extremely positive step in relation to attitudes towards women's ageing. While going grey should be accepted as an inevitability, deciding whether to reach for the bottle remains. Whether you choose to wear it white with pride, or gain confidence gradually from these silver stripes, we along with John Frieda ask two beauty insiders for their opinions, while discovering the best new products to help you get the most out of your braids. SILVER SISTERS I would become increasingly resentful of the tyranny of hue, so I decided to wind down with growing up, explains beauty writer and author Vicci Bentley. It took about 18 months and the regular finishes go completely silver and I love it. Freedom, fortune and unexpected compliments all confirm that it was the right choice for me. I have always believed in possession of my age; rolling over the years is liberating and perhaps an even more youthful-looking option. I can honestly say that I have never been proud of my hair so far. So what if I lost my pigment? I got a shiny new natural look. For naturally grey hair, color care professionals at John Frieda have recently developed an innovative new range of Shimmering Silver, designed to give gray hair a youthful and radiant shine while neutralizing any brass. Its SilverGloss technology improves the condition of the hair - which may seem drier because follicles produce less sebum as we age - with a combination of moisture gripping, softening polyanes and lightweight, reflective and glitter enhancing silicone oil. HER DARK MATERIALS Silver may be so posh, but my grays have sprouted into ugly spots, say Donna Francis, founder of thebeautyed.com. My mom has this amazing waterfall of silver in the middle of her hair... my gray spots, on the other hand, looked like dark puddles. My hair also lost its volume when I had children. The long, flat gray hair was not the look to which I aspired. So after my first son, I searched for a low-level commitment method to cover my grays and made the transition to a lovely, velvety chocolate brown. I never looked back: it makes me feel much more confident. For those who are also looking for a solution with a low level of commitment to cover their first gray, the new Dely Grey range is a hassle-free way to help mix white on brunette hair with less than 50% gray. The clever combination of coffee extract and GreyBlend technology works by depositing a naturally brown tone on the pigment-less strands of hair, which is then mixed with your own shade from the first use. Whether or not to go gray is certainly a deeply personal and emotional choice, which can be defining in how we see ourselves aging. So when this starts to happen, the most important thing is that we feel empowered to have a choice; be armed with the right right about how to get the best out of our hair, regardless of shade. And then be prepared for the compliments of incoming...
